

Manufacturing

From assembling bicycle products to producing electronics equipment and medical devices, Colorado Springs' manufacturing presence is diverse and vibrant. The region's facilities are leading some of the world's most innovative manufacturing ventures around the globe.

No single industry type dominates locally manufactured products. Electronics, mechanical devices, textiles and computer components constitute high-profile segments, but metal products, industrial equipment, plastics and printing are also represented.

High quality non-union labor, inexpensive utilities, moderate weather and reasonable construction and labor costs are principal reasons for the strong growth in local manufacturing during the past several decades. Colorado's location near the geographic center of the continent, plus excellent transportation links, make distribution timely and efficient.

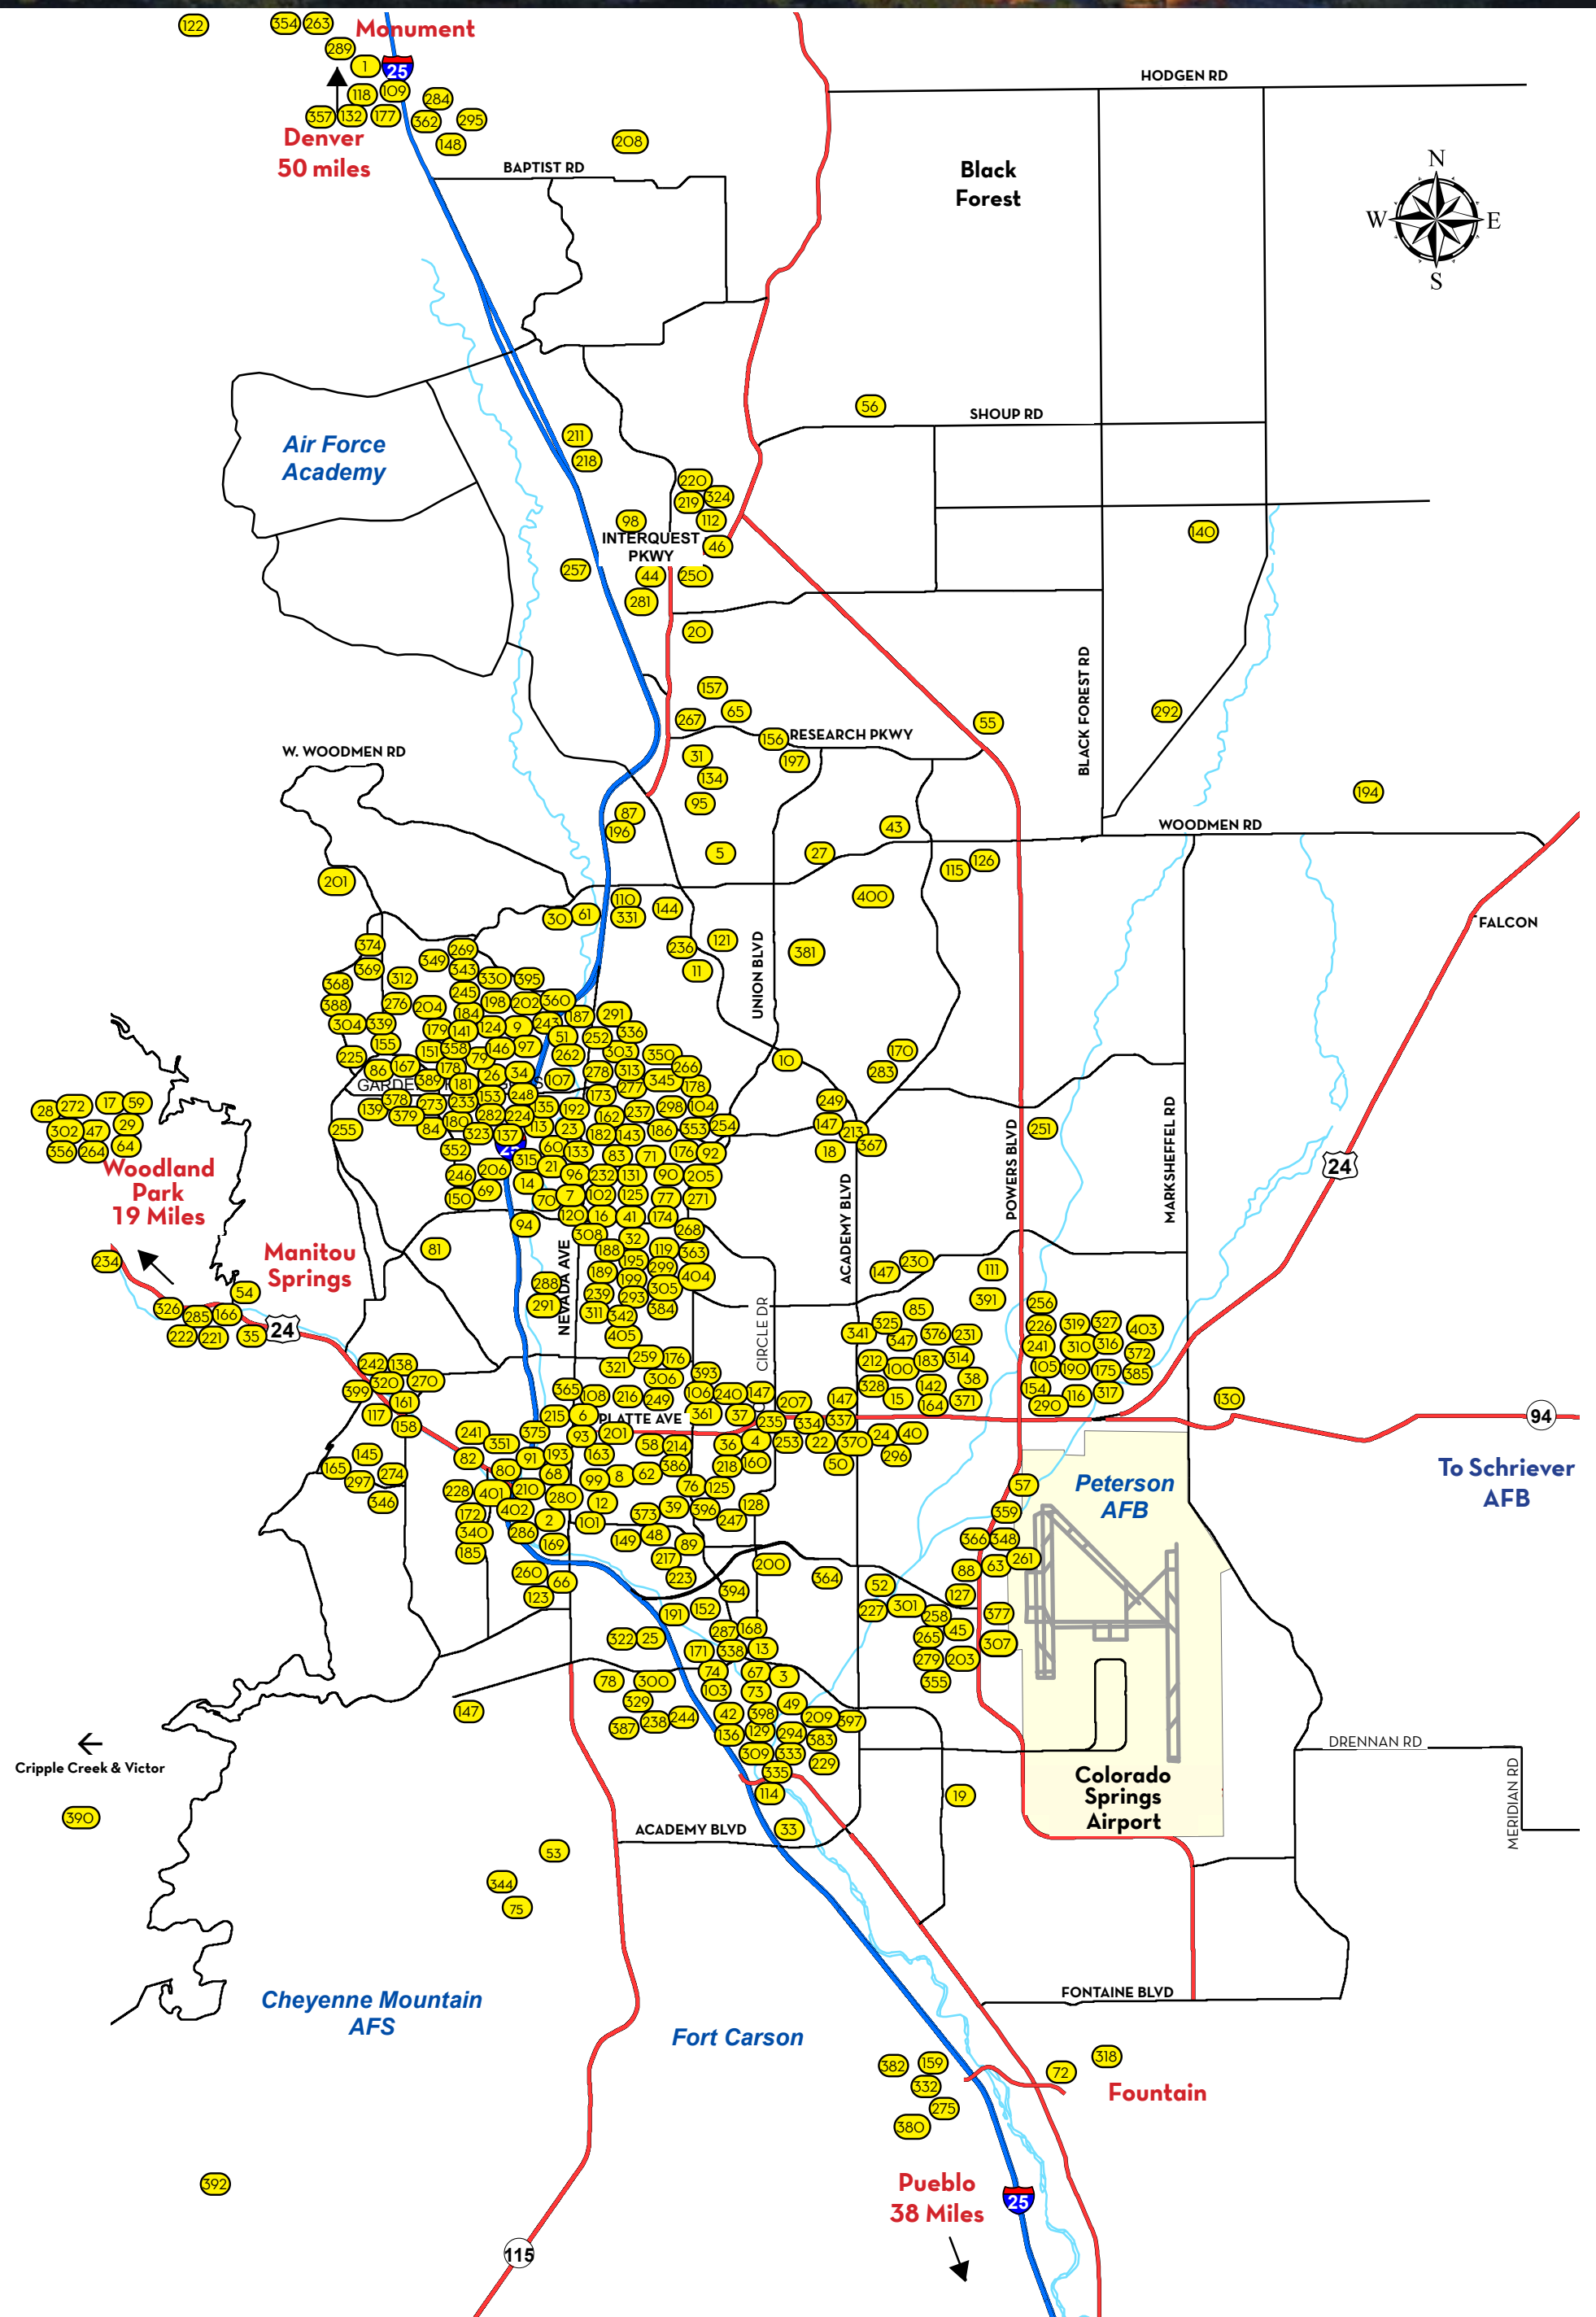

Many local vendors provide services and supplies for sophisticated manufacturing concerns. For example, Springs Fabrication, a leading metal manufacturing company, led the assembly for a system that filtered radiation out of Fukushima's waters.

With support and manufacturing-related training programs spurred by top-notch educational institutions, such as Pikes Peak Community College and the University of Colorado Colorado Springs, the region's workforce is skilled and available to create the next breakthrough.

With one of the largest Foreign Trade Zones in the country, the Pikes Peak region offers big benefits for companies looking to import or export parts.
